CHILDREN'S STORY:

Jackie Learns from the Firefighters

By Patricia Rust

Jackie loved being in the city and doing loop-de-loops through the thick air. She loved watching the sidewalks fill with people who were bundled up and moving fast as storm clouds. “Where are they going?” she wondered, “and what’s the big hurry?!”

Jackie missed her best friends and the beach. She decided to go tell them about the adventures she had enjoyed in the big city. She flew up high and away until she looked down and even the big buildings looked liked tiny grains of sand.

When she arrived at the beach, her best friend, Doowee Dolphin, the fastest swimmer in the sea, was sipping a smelt smoothie in a coconut cup. He was leaning back and enjoying the warm salty water and tradewinds that blew this time of day. “Life is good,” thought Doowee as Jackie the Angel cruised by and tickled him with her feathered wings.

“Coochi coochi coo,” teased Jackie and to her surprise Doowee flipped high out of the water and spun around ready to poke her with his rostrum just like he would do to a shark that attacked him.

“Hey, what’s the big idea, Jackie? I thought you were a shark.”

“Do I look like a shark?”

“You do look kind of gray.”

“I’ve been in the city...” but before Jackie could tell Doowee anything, Doowee told her he had a big surprise for her. He had convinced the Flying Penguin Brothers to come and sing with Doowee’s Dowop band.

“The penguins sing, ‘Do wop she bop’ while I dance in the water. We could take this show on the road!” Jackie continued to listen while she steadied herself in the currents of air around her.

Doowee was so excited to have Jackie back at the beach. “Let’s be a team. You fly while I jump and flip.” Jackie wasn’t quite ready for this much activity after her visit to the city, but she went along with Doowee and his idea of fun. The penguins were on a small boat and one penguin started the boat’s engine by pulling a rope and then the boat did circles while Doowee leaped and Jackie flew. “Do wop she bop,” came the sounds and Doowee’s face was all smiles.

Jackie’s was not. “Stop!” she screamed. “The boat is on fire!” The penguins ran from side to side having no idea what to do. Jackie’s wings only fanned the flames and made them bigger. Then Jackie remembered the brave firefighters who put out the fire in the big city.

“Doowee!” cried Jackie, “Squirt water at them! With your blow hole Doowee didn’t take time to think. He acted. Soon, he was using his dorsal fin to splash water on the terrified penguins. Before long, the fire was out, but Doowee kept squirting water because he had done such a good job he wanted to make sure the fire was all gone and that the penguins stayed wet and safe.

When the disaster was over, Jackie asked The Flying Penguin Brothers, “Why didn’t you jump out of the boat and into the water?”

“We can’t swim!” they answered. By the look in Jackie’s eyes, they were in for more than just a swimming lesson.

“I think I’ll teach you to fly, too!” exclaimed Jackie. “At least I can try.”

Have you tried anything that was hard for you to do this week?

Jackie sends you a big angel hug!

CHILDREN'S NEWS:

Penguins

You might be surprised to learn that not all penguins live in the south pole. Some penguins can be found in tropical regions south of the equator! While you usually see black and white penguins at the zoo, penguins can also be brown or bluish-gray. None of them can fly, but they are all very good swimmers. For more information about the various species visit this site:

Books for the Deaf or Blind

Following her recent visit to the John Tracey Clinic, a Los Angeles center for deaf children, Patricia was inspired to make The King of Skittledeedoo accessible to two needy child populations: the deaf and the blind. She is researching ways to publish the book in Braille for blind children and to communicate the story to deaf children too young to learn to read, but still in need of literacy education. These editions will be in addition to the third English edition and the new Spanish edition currently in the works.

The deadline for the summer contest is approaching. The winner will receive a family portrait sitting and hand-printed 8X10 valued at $200 from professional photographer Lee Brubaker. To enter, write a story about your favorite thing about summer and send it to contest@powerforkids.com.
